DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The New Mercy Hospital stands 280 ft. high. Faced in Buff-colored, self-cleaning brick, it is 19 stories high (3 are underground) with symmetrical fenestration. Twelve cantilevered upper stories rise above the 4 lower levels, forming the massive 3-dimensional rectangular which defines the building.

The main entrance fronts on a driveway off St. Paul Street. A one story metal and glass structure with a marble base, it boasts 3 angular brackets which support the extended roof and divide the fixed rectangular glass windows in metal enframements into 2 sections. The side sections each contain a glass and aluminum door.

Seven windows fill the first floor. Enframed in ashlar stone, they contain 3/3/3 fixed lights divided by aluminum mullions and muntins. The 2nd, 3rd and 4th floors each contain 14 windows. They are composed of a rectangular fixed upper light which is separated from the lower horizontal rectangular light by an aluminum muntin. Below this light is a coffee-colored metal panel. The windows are united by upper and lower brick string courses.

Banded metal detailing underlines the cantilevered upper stories. Though slightly wider, the 9 windows on each of these floors are identical to those on the 2nd.

The sides of the Hospital repeat the fenestration of the front facade with the exception of the 2nd bays on either end. Here the windows are bipartite.

A glass and metal walkway extends from the Hospital to a parking lot on the north side of Saratoga Street.
